The Chicago Cubs' victory in the 2016 World Series was one of the most improbable and unforgettable moments in sports history. After 108 years of heartbreak and disappointment, the Cubs finally broke their curse and brought the World Series trophy back to the North Side of Chicago.

The Cubs' victory was a team effort, but there were a few players who stood out in the World Series. David Ross, the veteran catcher, hit a game-tying home run in the 6th inning of Game 7. Anthony Rizzo, the first baseman, drove in the go-ahead run in the 10th inning. And Kris Bryant, the third baseman, was named the World Series MVP after hitting .408 with two home runs and six RBIs.

But the Cubs' victory was about more than just the players. It was about the fans, who had waited so long for this moment. It was about the city of Chicago, which has always been a baseball town. And it was about the legacy of the Cubs, a team that has always been a part of the fabric of American culture.

The Cubs' victory was a reminder that anything is possible. It was a reminder that even the longest of droughts can come to an end. And it was a reminder that the power of belief can overcome any obstacle.

The Game

Game 7 of the 2016 World Series was a back-and-forth affair. The Indians took an early lead, but the Cubs came back to tie the game in the 6th inning on a home run by David Ross. The Indians regained the lead in the 8th inning, but the Cubs tied it again in the 9th inning on a sacrifice fly by Miguel Montero.

The game went into extra innings, and the Cubs finally took the lead for good in the 10th inning on a single by Anthony Rizzo. The Cubs held on to win the game 8-7, and the city of Chicago erupted in celebration.
